NUMBER 61

Can't some one say a word for the late Mr. Mahone.

Gorham can condole with Platt. They have both been retired.

The Republican central clubs of New York city fired one hundred guns in the city hall park in honor of Robertson's confirmation.

General Jerry M. Rusk, of this State has been nominated as Charge d' Affaires to Paraguay and Uruguay. The office pays a salary of $5,000 a year.

It is reported from Albany that only twenty-seven names are necessary to defeat Conkling and Platt for re-election, and that over forty have already been secured.

Mr. Platt could hitch on to the coat tail of Mr. Conkling in going out of the Senate, but he can't hitch on in trying to go back. There's where the little joke comes in.

There will be no balm for the wounded spirit of Platt. While the country will smile over the event, he will be a man with his luck in becoming a tailpiece to anybody.

More guns were fired in the State of New York over the confirmation of Robertson than have been heard in that State since the down-fall of the rebellion, except on a Fourth of July.

It is remarkable that the nomination which produced so much sensation and which made Conkling resign and filled the country with wild excitement, should be confirmed without even calling the roll of Senators.

If Mr. Conkling has any hope of re-election, he will be overcome with discouragement when he learns that Tom Nichol has gone to Albany to work up the chances of two other men. Nichol trying to defeat Conkling—a toad sitting on a railway track trying to stop a locomotive.

Baker's bank at Fond du Lac has failed. The liabilities are placed at $100,000 and the assets are said to be $150,000, but the latter is probably an exaggeration. The depositors were among the common people in the city, on whom the loss will fall pretty heavily. It is said that too much summer resort killed the bank.

There is hardly any doubt that Mr. Conkling could return to the Senate if he wants to, but poor Platt is not so fortunate. He is just entering on a term of six years, and after two months is out and there are nineteen chances out of twenty that he will stay out. In trying to be brave he will be left out in the cold.

General Grant is done with Mexico, and will come home in August. A dispatch from the City of Mexico, to St. Louis, says: "General Grant will not get his railroad concessions from this Congress, and will leave for home in ten days an angry and disappointed man. It is stated, however, that a law will be passed conferring on the President full authority to make contracts and grant subsidies."

The reader must be hard to please indeed who in the diversified contents of the North American Review for June should find nothing to win his attention. First we have an article by the Hon. Hugh McCulloch on "Our Future Fiscal Policy," treating of the problems of re-funding, the monetization of silver, and the restoration of the United States to their just rank among the maritime nations of the world. George B. Loring writes of "The Patriotic Element in American Society," but the reader need not apprehend no glorification of artificial rank, for in the author's estimation the patriotic element here is simply the strongest popular element—that portion of the people, whatever their lineage who are engaged in developing the mental, moral and material wealth of the Republic. Dorman B. Eaton makes a spirited defense of civil service; Prof. W. G. Sumner states very clearly the argument of free ships; Frederick Douglass writes of "The Color Line"; Desire Charney, of "The Ruins of Central America"; Dr. Austin Flint discusses the benefits of vaccination; J. M. Mason asserts the lawful power of the government to regulate railway charges; and finally, Prof. E. S. Morse sets forth the evidences of the existence of man upon this continent in prehistoric times.

MR. CONKLING AND THE SENATORSHIP.
Mr. Conkling is out of the Senate—out from his own choice—and there is a general feeling among the masses of the Republicans that he should stay out. Some of the Conkling papers in New York make the prediction that he will not stand for re-election, and that he will take no part in the senatorial struggle. It is reported that his positive refusal to accept a re-election under any circumstances is already in Governor Cornell's hands.

It has been generally understood that Mr. Conkling resigned his seat for the purpose of appealing his case to the Republican party of New York as represented in the Legislature. It is hard to tell wherein he would gain any substantial ground by taking this course. His re-election would signify nothing in particular, and he would be where he started, with President Garfield ahead and Robertson confirmed. But the prediction is ventured that Conkling will be returned to the Senate in accordance with a plan carefully marked out before his resignation was sent in. If he also lately refuses to stand for re-election, he will show more good sense and higher purposes than the people give him credit of possessing. To be consistent he should stay out of the Senate after going out in a fit of passion and with a purpose to spite the President. If he does not desire to show boy's play, but wants to be taken at his word, he will refuse absolutely to accept a re-election. A firm stand on this point would make Mr. Conkling a stronger man than ever. He would then show the people of the United States that he was a man of honor and of solid convictions, and not a demagogue. Those who now oppose him the most bitterly, who unjustly heap vile epithets upon him, and who can see no good in the man, would, if they were wise and intent on being fair, give him credit for being honest in his resignation. Should Mr. Conkling fling away all selfishness, all petty spite, and all attempts at personal aggrandizement, and give the world to understand that he should be taken at his word, he would rise like a tower of strength in the nation.

But the presumption is that he will not do this; that he wants to fight the administration, and the battle-ground must be the Senate chamber, and there he will plant his batteries and stake his colors. If this is Mr. Conkling's intent—that of making mischief and setting himself up as a "boss," it will be hoped by all fair-minded and true-hearted Republicans that he will be defeated. Bossism has cursed the Democratic party and the Republicans can not afford to have any of it in their party. We wish to be as fair to Mr. Conkling as possible, to give him credit for being a great man and a powerful leader, a man above demagogism, a man honest and true, with high purposes and many aims, and therefore hope that he will decline a re-election.

MR. SECRETARY BLAINE.
There are a great many Republicans who believe the nomination of Judge Robertson bears the ear-marks of Secretary Blaine, and that the judge was not the personal choice of President Garfield. Whether this belief is well-founded is not known to a certainty, but even among the friends of the administration there is a mistrust that Mr. Blaine had a finger in the pie, and that the collectorship would not have thrown the country in wild excitement and up-set things generally, had it not been for the Secretary of State. So far there is no positive proof that Mr. Blaine is the author of all the mischief, although it is getting to be understood that he acted the President in the matter of Judge Robertson's appointment.

After the row fairly got under way in Washington and the indications were that there would be a general war between the administration and the Conklingites, a party of Senators went to the White House to urge the President to withdraw Robertson's name. The basis of compromise was hardly what the President considered fair, but in order to secure harmony, to preserve peace, and not wishing to appear stubborn or unrelenting in the matter, the report says he was almost persuaded it was his duty to meet Mr. Conkling half way, and gave the Senators hope that he would put an end to the controversy by withdrawing the name of Judge Robertson. But shortly after that the President saw Mr. Blaine, and the matter was discussed when the former was given to understand that if the nomination of Robertson was withdrawn the latter would resign. Here was another snag equally as bad as the first. To clear both of them was impossible. The President could not serve two masters and come out whole. He could not ride two horses when each was going in opposite directions. He could not oil both of them down to any special advantage, and turn whichever way he might he would strike the snag he wished to escape. Finally, it is strongly rumored, Blaine acted as President, so far as Judge Robertson's nomination was concerned, and the name was not withdrawn.

There is a deep-seated and bitter feeling existing between James G. Blaine and Roscoe Conkling. It is a hard task for both of them to remain in the same political party. There is no doubt Blaine wanted to humiliate Conkling; and the latter was stung to the quick by the appointment of Blaine to the chief seat among the cabinet ministers. Both have grievances, and both are reckless in applying the means to defeat each other.

In this case, if the Conkling men were willing to adopt a fair compromise, the President should not have been ill-advised by the Secretary of State. Mr. Blaine is a very excellent man in many respects. He is a man of large brain, a man of boundless courage, a brilliant orator, and a stalwart Republican, but he is strong-headed, and many times is not a safe adviser. He can get nearer the heart of the people than Mr. Conkling can because he is less aristocratic in his make-up and appearance, but he is more apt to misrepresent the interest of the people than the Senator from New York. Like Mr. Conkling, he feels his position, wealth, influence, and brilliancy, and wants to figure in the role of a boss. Moved by such ambition as this, he becomes, in many respects, an unsafe adviser in the cabinet of the President. A man who can not take a high, statesman-like view of an important question, rising above all personal consideration and petty spites, should not fill so high an office as that of United States Senator, or Secretary of State.

REJOICING.

ALBANY, N. Y., May 18.—A salute of 100 guns was fired here to-day in honor of the confirmation of Robertson.

WATERBURY, N. Y., May 18.—The Republicans held an enthusiastic meeting here to-night. Resolutions were passed censuring Conkling and Platt and sustaining the administration. The members of the legislature from this section were asked to labor for the return of Senators in accord with the administration. One hundred guns were fired over Robertson's confirmation.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., May 18.—The confirmation of Robertson and Merritt was celebrated by 100 guns.

UTICA, N. Y., May 18.—The Republicans fired 100 guns in honor of Robertson's confirmation. Utica is the home of Conkling.

Hudson, May 17.—The administration Republicans fired 100 guns in honor of Judge Robertson's confirmation. Petitions were circulated protesting against the reelection of Conkling and Platt.

ROSCOE CONKLING.

WASHINGTON, May 18.—A gentleman who had a long and confidential talk with Mr. Conkling this morning, says that he is convinced Conkling will not accept a re-election to the Senate. He is tired of public life, disgusted with the tricks and tergiversations of politicians, sick of the constant lying and misrepresentations to which he has been subjected, and the country need not trouble itself further as to his course. Platt will be returned and one of Conkling's strongest friends elected with him; but the senior Senator has left the field for good, and will hereafter devote himself to the practice of law. An effort will undoubtedly be made to shake his determination and the Legislature will show unmistakably its indorsement of him, but he will not go back. It may not be generally known that Mr. Conkling's health has been quite poor for more than a year, and the constant stream of slander poured out upon him, both as a private citizen and as a Senator, has combined to undermine a constitution once remarkably vigorous and powerful. Too proud to complain, he has borne their attacks with contemptuous silence, only at times revealing to intimate friends how he has been pained by such—malice and injustice. "I do not believe," continued this gentleman, "that his equal as a lawyer can be found in the United States, and I know he resigned after vainly trying to secure Justice. With the full determination of devoting himself from now on to the practice of his profession. The little men need not worry; they will have abundant opportunity to prove themselves equal to the task of supplying his place in the Senate and in the councils of the party; but let no one suppose that his retirement means a going over to Democracy. Personal humiliation does not change the principles of a man like Roscoe Conkling, and the Democrats hate him and fear him more than any man in American politics. We shall hear from him again on the stump; but I speak with an intimate knowledge of the man when I say that once in retirement no offer, however brilliant, will induce him to return to the position he has left."

"Does Mr. Conkling say he will not be a candidate?"
"I do not say that, and I do not wish to be understood as pretending to reveal his purposes or his aims. I only give my own convictions, knowing the man thoroughly and realizing his weariness of the strife and sham and pretense of public life."

THE CABINET.

WASHINGTON, May 18.—A special meeting of the cabinet will be held to-morrow to determine in regard to the New York nominations. It is believed the four names withdrawn will again be sent to the Senate. There are in all 200 nominations still to be made, but it is the intention of the President to send all to the Senate to-morrow, so that adjournment sine die may be had on Friday or Saturday.

TOOK IT COOLLY.

WASHINGTON, May 18.—Robertson's confirmation was prompt. No debate occurred and no records were made of the vote. The news spread quickly through the city, but created but little sensation as it was really known in advance and discounted. A Senator who was at the White House this morning said the President was busy signing the nominations and would not dislike the Senate to remain in session a day or two longer for him to clear up the business.

ITALY.

Great Excitement Among the Italians.

ROME, May 18.—There is extreme agitation throughout Italy, in consequence of the king having intrusted Signor Sella with the formation of a new cabinet. There were demonstrations last night at Naples, Florence, Pisa, as well as Milan, where the military charged the mob, and a number of persons were wounded. The extreme Left in the Chamber of Deputies have resolved to issue an appeal to the people, protesting against the transfer of power to the Right. The guard at the Quirinal, the residence of the king, has been doubled.

ON TRIAL FOR MURDER.

LA CROSSE, May 18.—The trial of J. C. Bennett, of Wausau, for the murder of Dr. Hoegel, of Steven's Point, on August 10, was called yesterday, but no jury was found until 11 this morning. The attorneys for the defense are Messrs. Hurley & Silverthorn and C. L. Hood; for the State, District Attorney Eldred and J. W. Losey. The defense plead not guilty on grounds of insanity caused by the excessive use of stimulants. Up to the time of adjournment five witnesses for the defense were examined. The case promises to be a long one. It will probably last about two weeks.

WOOLEN MILL FAILURE.

WAUKESHA, May 18.—The Waukesha county woolen manufacturing company made an assignment to-day. Nominal assets $125,000. The establishment was closed yesterday by the sheriff on an execution, and the assignment was made to-day. Considerable excitement prevails on account of its closure, as it was considered sound and doing a good paying business. Over fifty employees are thus thrown unexpectedly out of work.

BANK FAILURE.

FOND DU LAC, May 18.—Baker's bank suspended to-day. Liabilities, $100,000; assets claimed to be $150,000. They were mostly small depositors. The city treasurer had $40,000 in the bank as a special deposit, secured by mortgages of $36,000 on real estate. There is no run on other city banks. There is much indignation at Baker amongst his depositors.

WOLVES AND FOXES.

WAUPACA, Wis., May 18.—The wolf business still continues to flourish in Waupaca county. To-day Herm Mumburne brought five young ones into town, and presented them to the county clerk, demanding the bounty, which is $11 each. It is a question whether the official could have detected the difference had not some of the knowing ones put a fleecy fox in the lot. Young foxes and wolves of about four weeks old look much alike, and it is probable that Mr. Mumburne was mistaken.

UNDER THE WHEELS.

WAUKESHA, May 18.—A German by the name of William Heneke, who had imbibed rather freely during the evening, was run over and killed last night by a train at this place. A justice inquest was held this afternoon, and a verdict of "accidental death" rendered.
